REMARKS.

In submitting this the first annual report, since the new school law went into effect, it gives us pleasure to announce good progress in all our schools.

Your committee saw fit to take no advantage of the new law and the schools have been continued according to the same system as heretofore, with the exception of the mode of dividing the school money. We have endeavored to divide the money so as to give each pupil as nearly equal advantages as possible.

We are sorry that there are some who have not taken advantage of the long schools this year. Our school days, at most, are far too short to allow any of them to pass unimproved.

The public schools are the pride of our nation, for it is from them that come the men and women that are to rule in political and social circles.

It is only through the public school that the masses can be reached and educated. There the rich and poor are placed (as they should be) on an equality, and there is no child in however humble circumstances, but can obtain an education that will qualify him for the highest position of honor and trust.

Miss Simpson has had little previous experience in teaching, but her superior education and thorough manner of imparting it to her pupils, have made her school a success.

Miss Goodwin is an experienced teacher and under her instruction the school could not be otherwise than successful.

This was Miss Spaulding's first term in a public school, but she has eminent qualifications as a teacher, and the closing exercises of her school proved that no pains had been spared to make it a success.

Miss Palmer has been a successful teacher for several years, and this school will be no exception to her past record. This school is in a prospering condition.

Miss Rowe is too well known to need more than a passing notice. Under her long and faithful service this school will rank second to none.

Miss Hazelton has fully sustained her previous reputation as a successful teacher, under her continued instruction this school has taken a long step upwards.

Under the careful and thorough instruction of Miss Willur this school has continued to advance, and she has gained an excellent reputation as a teacher.

Respectfully submitted,

ALDEN F. SANBORN,	}	Board of Education.
